“ I remember the night I was a welding instructor for the apprenticeship, and sometime after our break someone yelled, "Clean up! It's time to clean up!" I looked up at the class clock and was surprised to see it actually was time to start cleaning up the shop to go home. After everybody was done, I said, "Ok, guys, we'll see you next time!", and with big smiles, they all ran for the door. Unfortunately, some of them burned rubber getting out of the parking lot.

A few minutes later, Bill Higgenbottom, the apprentice coordinator (and my boss), came in the shop not looking too happy. He asked what all the commotion was outside, then noticed the shop was empty. I told him it was quitting time, and they went home, but I was sorry about them making all that noise out in the parking lot. He looked shocked. "It's not time to go home, Lee!" I said, Yes it is, Bill. look at the clock! He looked up at it, sighed and said, "They gotcha!" He showed me his watch, and it was an hour earlier than the clock said. I found out later it was Ricky who managed to get to the clock 8' off the ground, and yelled clean up. The joke was on me. I was impressed.

Ricky, just like his dad, seemed like he always had a smile on his face, was always joking, but God help the person who made him mad. I still think about that night to this day, and have to laugh. He was a great guy. Rest in peace, little Brother.
